Message from the Secretariat

by Lee Tong Soon and Carlos Yoder

Happy New Year to all of you! We hope that 2024 has started off positively for everyone! Since we gradually emerged from the pandemic restrictions about two years ago, the Secretariat has primarily focused on our two consecutive World Conferences. After the Ghana conference, we started to review areas of operations and logistics that can become more effective, efficient, and relevant. One of these areas is the use of multiple languages in our publications, beginning with this issue of the Bulletin (see report from Spain/España on pages 20–22). Also beginning with the present issue is a change in this column from one that used to feature only the Secretary General to a platform where it can be more of a sharing of reflections and ideas between the Secretariat and our membership.

In 2024, the Secretariat will focus on our Wellington World Conference (January 2025) as a priority. The Wellington Team comprises the Secretariat, Brian Diettrich (Local Arrangements Chair), and the Co-Chairs of the Programme Committee, Kirsty Gillespie and Marcia Ostashewski. The Secretariat would like to thank our Chairs and their respective committee members for taking on the tasks of organising Wellington 2025. We look forward to working with everyone throughout this year.

Funding our Future is another key priority for the Secretariat. As you know, ICTMD has begun a concerted effort to raise funds to support the future of the Council. Our dedicated steering committee comprising Samuel Araújo, Daniel Avorgbedor, Brian Diettrich, Oceyr Mushu, Mayco Santaella, Susana Sardo, Kendra Stepputat, and Jasmina Talam have been working together to explore effective, efficient, and welcoming ways to make it easy for all of us to contribute to ICTMD’s fundraising initiative. The Secretariat is grateful to our committee members for their indefatigable support and relentless commitment to raise funds to further develop our core mission in enhancing research, teaching, publication, public sector work, and education through the study of dance and music globally through the twenty-first century.

We invite you to stand with us in supporting the vital work of ICTMD. Despite expanding challenges and inflation over the years, our membership fees have remained unchanged in the past 12 years. Membership fees primarily sustain our basic operations. As we continue to mature and expand our work in the preservation, promotion, and celebration of diverse cultural expressions globally, there is an imminent need to increase our funding portfolio to enable us to develop and engage in innovative projects, and equally importantly, to support our members in attending our World Conferences, Study Group Symposia, and other related events.

Now, more than ever, we need your help to continue this important mission. Please visit the ICTMD website (https://ictmd.org/donate) and contribute online. ICTMD needs your help to achieve sustainable growth. Please help in funding our future!

Warm greetings to everyone from the Secretariat for a peaceful and joyous 2024!

Message from the President

A selection of pictures documenting some of the aforementioned events can be found on the Council’s Instagram channel.

ICTMD membership has all reasons to be proud of Study Groups and their activities. As many as 27 Study Groups (11 of them defined regionally and 16 thematically) organise their own symposia, usually on an biennial basis and in different parts of the world. Non-World Conference years are typically marked by Study Group symposia, although some, occasionally or regularly, prefer to meet in World Conference years.

For instance, eight of them held symposia in 2023 (reports about those on Audiovisual Ethnomusicology and Music and Dance of the Slavic World are published elsewhere on this Bulletin), while at least 16 others, judging from list of upcoming events, will hold them in 2024. Some will meet online, while most of the others will hold their symposia in various parts of the globe: Bangladesh, Cuba, Germany, Italy, Japan, Malaysia, Norway, Philippines, Romania, Spain, Taiwan, Türkiye, and the USA. Three of these events will be joint symposia involving, in different extents, two Study Groups: Applied Ethnomusicology and Sacred and Spiritual Sounds and Practices, Music Archaeology and Iconography of the Performing Arts, and finally Indigenous Music and Dance and Music and Minorities.

With such intense activities, it becomes increasingly hard to avoid cases of different symposia taking place at the same time. In order to at least minimise such situations, Study Group authorities are kindly asked to follow the procedure in the following three phases: (a) consulting the Study Group Shared Calendar to inform themselves about the timings of the already planned events; (b) sending the timing of the proposed symposium to the Secretariat; and (c) after receiving confirmation from the Secretariat, making the timing of their symposium public. Please note that there is also an Executive Board committee dedicated to Study Groups, always willing to receive suggestions on how to further improve our shared efforts.

Finally, the Study Group on Mediterranean Music Studies celebrated its 30th anniversary with a special online session on 23 January 2024. Chair Vanessa Paloma Elbaz and Vice Chair Salvatore Morra provided a connection via the Council’s listserv. Congratulations and welcome!
Second Notice and First Call for Proposals

by Marcia Ostashewski and Kirsty Gillespie, Programme Committee Co-Chairs

You are cordially invited to attend the 48th ICTMD World Conference that will be held between 9 and 15 January 2025 at Te Herenga Waka, Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand. The ICTMD World Conference provides the leading international venue for the presentation of new research on traditions of music and dance. Many new initiatives emerge at World Conferences and, perhaps even more crucially, discussion at these meetings helps us shape our ongoing work. A successful World Conference is a truly stimulating place to be, and a wonderful place to meet and share ideas, music, and dance, with colleagues from all over the world.

Conference Themes

1. Indigenous Peoples’ Music and Dance
As the first World Conference to be held in Aotearoa New Zealand, we acknowledge Māori as the Indigenous peoples of New Zealand, and we seek to follow tikanga Māori (accepted customs and practices according to Māori); we also acknowledge their ancestors, experiences, and histories. This theme represents an opportunity to engage deeply with Indigenous musics and dance, Indigenous ways of knowing and being, traditional knowledges, knowledge holders, indigeneities, Indigenous issues, and Indigenous methods, perspectives, and pedagogies, including intergenerational and intersectional research, resilience, regeneration, reclaimation (of lands, and cultural practices), as well as trauma-informed research to find pathways to heal the ongoing impacts of colonialism, neocolonialisms, and new imperialisms. For many, indigeneity is a “positioning” that changes in different contexts. While “Indigenous” is a politically powerful term used by Māori people, in other parts of the world terms such as “First Peoples” and “First Nations” are preferred, and this theme invites us to consider the intricacies of these differences as we explore Indigenous musics and dance from around the globe. In this theme we also consider the ways in which holistic worldviews and lifeways are interconnected and interdisciplinary, as well as the interface between the cultures and performing arts of Indigenous peoples and the wider world.

2. Environment, Place, Displacement, and Relocation
This theme invites proposals arising from music and dance studies relating to issues of environment and place, including displacement, and re-claiming places and spaces, the physicality of place, and securing a place for everyone. As we prepare to gather in a region of islands where rising sea levels are impacting whole nations, we are experiencing heightened concerns about factors in the relationships between people and place, climate change, politics, war, food (in)security, and new precarities that may lead to displacement of individuals or groups of people, and music and dance traditions, as well as ways in which people, traditions, and practices (re)connect from place to place. Presentations are invited that address these issues both in Oceania and around the world.

3. Translation, Inclusivity, Reception
As we engage with the place where our World Conference is being held, Aotearoa, we note that it has three official languages: te reo Māori, English (de facto), and New Zealand Sign Language (NZSL). This leads to questions about music and dance as part of communicating and translating, as well as engaging with multilingualism, and finding ways of working with multiple languages as part of efforts to decolonize music and dance studies. It inspires thinking about language and linguistic studies, and how they inform/are informed by music and dance studies and other humanities. Because languages are extensive and complex systems of knowledge, this theme also inspires thinking about the promotion and protection of languages, (re)vitalisation and sustainability, as well as language-related rights. Specifically acknowledging NZSL, this theme also connects with the burgeoning research of those working across hearing and deaf experiences; and it raises issues associated with accessibility, abilities, and inclusivity, as well as audience reception and perception.

4. Dance, Movement, Gesture, Embodiment
At the World Conference 2023 in Ghana, Council members voted overwhelmingly to include the word “dance” in our name; this decision was ratified and adopted on 26 August 2023, and the International Council for Traditions of Music and Dance was born. The change of our organisation’s name attends to the prominence and importance of dance, movement, and gesture in our field. This conference theme foregrounds the ways in which bodies and embodied knowledges may factor into creative practice and research, and ways in which these bodies, knowledges, and experiences may be gendered or shaped by aspects of intersectional experience. Proposals within this theme may also wish to consider the ways in which sound and movement intertwine.

5. Technologies of Sound, Music, Movement, and Dance
Within this theme, we invite proposals attending to the technologies and ways of “doing” and “making” of music and dance; the material culture and tangible technologies, as well as the social technologies, software, and social media platforms involved in sound, music, movement, and dance performances and productions. In all arts, new technologies continue to influence the creation, recording, and circulation of music and dance. This theme invites exploration of impacts of technology on music and dance practices of diverse communities, with special consideration for LGBTQI+, racialised and marginalised experiences, as well as considering more traditional roles in music and dance making. Artistic labour has always been precarious, perhaps more so in a world of rapidly changing economies and governments, institutions, and material realities of life post-COVID, amidst strike actions, and the growing presence of artificial intelligence. In the context of these and other dramatic changes: how do/can we keep doing what we are doing?

6. Alternative Approaches and Methods to Research, Education, and Knowledge Dissemination

Researchers in our field are innovating research, teaching, and dissemination practices—in part to foster greater inclusivity, as well as find avenues to create and share knowledge in ways that honour the modes and media of music and dance studies. This theme creates a space for us to explore new approaches and technologies. It includes everything from (and well beyond) practice-based research, artistic research, and research-creation; oral, aural, inter-sensory, multi-sensory, and multi-modal practices; applied, activist, advocacy, allyship, and anti-racist methodologies; participatory, collaborative, community-engaged, and community-led strategies. As well, we invite proposals that address the transformative possibilities for and implications of working with diverse knowledge holders, kinds of knowledge, and ways of knowing.

7. New Research

In addition to the themes above, we welcome papers on new areas of research not addressed within the conference themes.

Submission guidelines

Submitted abstracts should be no longer than 300 words, and written in English. Abstracts in te reo Māori are also welcome.

A person may submit, and/or be named on, one submission only. The exception may be that a person may also be named as a Chair (not serve as discussant) in addition to being named as a presenter.

1. Single papers are 20 minutes long, followed by 10 minutes of discussion.

2. Single paper/performances are 20 minutes long, followed by 10 minutes of discussion.

3. Film/video presentations are 30-minute long sessions where a filmmaker introduces their recently completed film, and discusses it with the audience participants. As well, the film will be screened during the Film Festival that takes place during the conference.

4. Workshops are 60 or 90 minutes long, where a facilitator(s) lead a session that involves participatory music-making or dance, or other creative, critical activity, as well as discussion and dialogue.

5. Organised panels are group sessions lasting either 90 or 120 minutes, and they can include either: (a) Three thematically interrelated papers; (b) Four thematically interrelated papers; or (c) Three thematically interrelated papers and a discussant.

6. Roundtables provide opportunities for presenters to discuss a subject with each other and with members of the audience. Roundtables can be 60, 90, or 120 minutes long, and should include at least four but no more than five presenters.

Welcome to Aotearoa New Zealand!

by Brian Diettrich, Local Arrangements Committee Chair

Kia ora koutou katoa / Greetings to all. We greatly look forward to welcoming all members to New Zealand for the 48th ICTMD World Conference. Situated in the southwest Pacific, New Zealand is called Aotearoa in the Indigenous Māori language. The host city will be Wellington, the vibrant capital city of the country, and which holds the Indigenous name Te Whanganui-a-Tara (The Great Harbour of Tara). This will be the first World Conference held in New Zealand, and regionally only the third world conference within Oceania in the Council’s history.

Located at the southern tip of the North Island, Wellington is a compact urban space and a coastal city on the Pacific Ocean. In close proximity to its surrounding forests, unique bird life, and an ecosanctuary, the city supports many national institutions, including the National Museum Te Papa, the National Library, the Sound and Vision Archives, numerous music and dance institutions and venues, embassies representing many countries, and a diversity of musical and artistic engagements. The January timing of the conference will take advantage of summer in the southern hemisphere, characterised by warm, pleasant weather, with January temperatures in Wellington on average about 21 degrees Celsius.

The host will be Te Herenga Waka, Victoria University of Wellington, and Te Kōkī The New Zealand School of Music. The school’s ethnomusicology programme was founded in 1977 and supports undergraduate and postgraduate study in ethnomusicology, with traditional priorities on music in New Zealand and the Asia Pacific region, including Indigenous Māori and Pacific musics. The broader university is well known for its extensive programmes across the humanities and social sciences. In collaboration with Tourism New Zealand and Business Events Wellington, the venue for the conference will be Tākina, the new Wellington Convention and Exhibition Centre. Located in the central city near the waterfront, with quick access to accommodation, food, cultural institutions, and the sea, Tākina will be an ideal space to gather for the next World Conference. We wish to welcome all participants to New Zealand in person, but online presentations will be available at the conference.

Wellington supports a wide range of hotel accommodation options, including some student housing through Victoria University of Wellington. International flights come direct to Wellington from Australia and some Pacific Island countries, but most international flights enter the country through Auckland, which is a short fifty minute flight from Wellington. New Zealand supports visa waivers for sixty eligible countries and territories; ICTMD members from outside these countries will require a visa for their visit. Information is widely available online, and the local arrangements committee will publish further information across the year.

With sincere manaakitanga (hospitality) the local arrangements committee looks forward to warmly welcoming all ICTMD members to Wellington in 2025. If members have early questions about Wellington and the conference, please do not hesitate to get in touch with me as chair of local arrangements.

by Adriana Cerletti, Liaison Officer

Since our last report in 2018, seven new Argentine members have joined the Council, thanks to their memberships being supported by the ICTMD Secretariat. Among them are five researchers at the University of Buenos Aires (professors Adil Podhajcer and Rosa Chalkho, and postgraduate students Viviana Parody, Victoria Polti, and Soledad Torres Agüero), María Mendizabal (chair of the Musics of Oral Traditions sector of the Archive of the National Institute of Musicology “Carlos Vega”), and Mariana Signorelli, researcher at the Universidad Nacional de Quilmes and member of MyGLA.

Silvia Citro and Adriana Cerletti received an Honourable Mention in the 2020 Otto Mayer-Serra Prize in Music Research, for the co-authored article “The Song of the Qom Women of the Argentine Chaco: From Indigenous Domestic Space to Spectacle Intercultural Hybrid.”

Rosa Chalkho completed her PhD at the Faculty of Social Sciences of the University of Buenos Aires (UBA) with a dissertation on sounds in Argentinian classical cinema, and Mariana Signorelli received a doctoral scholarship from the National Scientific and Technical Research Council (CONICET) to develop her project “Choreographies of the Nation Around 2010: Relationships Between Music, Dance, and Politics Based on the Ballet Estancia by Alberto Ginastera,” also at UBA.

In 2021 and 2022, Citro and Torres Agüero collaborated with the Qom singer Ema Cuañeri in the documentation, research, and creation process for recording the album Qa’añe-Mujer, as well as producing a promotional video of the album made together with the dance-theatre group Qom Pocnolec. The album compiles ancestral Qom songs that Ema received from her family, as well as songs from her father—shaman and musician Clemente Cuañeri—documented in 1998. This work was supported by the National Fund for the Arts and the National Institute of Music.

The album that was released in 2023, and is available to listen on Spotify. The promotional video can be watched on YouTube. The album and video were presented at the Mariano Moreno National Library in Buenos Aires, on 10 August 2023, within the framework of the Músicas Originarias cycle. The presentation can be watched on YouTube.

Cerletti was elected President of the Argentine Association of Musicology (AAM) for the 2021–2022 biennium. This society, founded in 1986, is considered a pioneer in the region. María Mendizabal is also a member of the society’s Executive Board as well as its treasurer, and she continues in this position for the 2023–2024 biennium.

The AAM publishes the Argentine Journal of Musicology (RAM), and organises the Argentine Congress of Musicology (CAM) among others activities. In 2021, the Congress was co-organised with the National Institute of Musicology “Carlos Vega” (INM) and the National University of Córdoba, and it was held virtually on 9–13 August. More than 100 speakers from several countries participated, with lectures and thematic panels. Pilar Ramos Lopez (Spain) and Samuel Araújo (Brazil) delivered the opening and closing lectures, which were broadcast live via YouTube.

In 2023 the Congress was again co-organised with INM, but held in Buenos Aires on 16–19 August. In this case, the opening address was presented by Julio Mendivil (Austria/Perú), while Marita Fornaro (Uruguay) delivered the closing lecture. During the congress, the INM presented its recently-created digital catalogue, in which funds and collections can be consulted, available online at inmcv.cultura.gob.ar.

Despite the pandemic, AAM developed an intense programme of activities during 2021 and 2022. In November 2021, together with INM and the Fundación Astor Piazzolla, AAM co-organised the twin events “Virtual Symposium Astor Piazzolla” and “Virtual Conversation Tribute to Ariel Ramírez,” to celebrate the hundredth birthdays of both Argentine musicians. Both activities can be watched at AAM’s YouTube channel.

In July 2022, the society co-organised the 10th AAM Colloquium with the National University of Cuyo, and in October 2022 the Association held its 3rd Conference of Young Musicologists. Furthermore, the AAM published four volumes Citro and Torres Agüero produced the video Las shamanas del Ntonagak-gozo, which portrays, in a non-traditional way, research on ancestral Qom music and dance based on a creative montage of historical, ethnographic, and artistic archives. The work was selected to participate in various festivals, and in 2023 it won the RAFMA (Argentine Network of Festivals and Audiovisual Samples) award for best Argentine short film at the VideoDanzaBA International Festival.

In August 2021, Citro was part of the Organising Committee of the 4th Latin American Meeting of Researchers on Bodies and Corporalities in Cultures, held at the Universidad Nacional Mayor de San Marcos, Lima, Peru, where other ICTMD members also participated with presentations about music and dance.

In 2023 Miguel Angel García retired from his professorship at the University of Buenos Aires, but he continues directing the scholarly journal El Oído Pensante.

Finally, Cerletti was elected to the Board of the Interdisciplinary Institute for Latin American Studies and Research (INDEAL) of the Faculty of Philosophy and Letters, UBA, for the 2023–2025 period. Numerous activities were carried out this year by INDEAL, among them, an honorary doctorate was awarded to Carlo Ginzburg. More information about INDEAL can be found on its website.

Scholarly meetings

- The 47th ICTM World Conference, held at the University of Ghana Legon, Ghana, 13–19 July 2023: Citro, Torres Agüero, Podhajcer, Greco and Cerletti

Armenia

by Tatevik Shakhkulyan, Liaison Officer

Politics and music

Since 2020 Armenia has been facing an uneasy life due to the Nagorno-Karabakh war, which has led to the migration of 120,000 Armenians, from their homes in Karabakh to other regions of the country and abroad. Consequently, it has become an urgent issue to collect the music of those who emigrated from Karabakh. A group of musicologists from the Institute of Arts of the Armenian National Academy of Sciences and the Komitas State Conservatory of Yerevan has undertaken this task. The collections will be circulated in the format of archives, publications, performances, etc. It is more difficult to preserve the real life of Karabakh music culture, since in migration it may be transformed according to new environments.

UNESCO issues
The collection of the works by Armenian ethnomusicologist and composer Komitas Vardapet (1869–1935) was recently inscribed in UNESCO’s Memory of the World Register. The collection includes the surviving original copies and manuscripts of his folk music collections, research, works, as well as epistolary heritage which often includes much information about his scholarly views.

Komitas was among the world’s pioneers who “invented” folk music as a phenomenon. His activity traced new paths in collecting and analysing traditional music, and involving them in music composition. Komitas created a new style of composition, which synthesised authentic folk and Christian church music with Western means of composition.

New archival discoveries
The music archives of Armenia present outstanding collections of folk musics, collected by many ethnomusicologists throughout the last 150 years. The two largest collections are kept at the Armenian National Academy of Sciences and at the Komitas State Conservatory, while smaller ones are kept at other institutions and museums. The collections include thousands of songs, melodies, and texts collected from different regions of the country. While a large number of those songs and melodies have been published, a huge portion is still kept archived.

Recently, a new archive collected by Bedros Alahaidoian (1934–2022) was presented to the aforementioned Institute. Being one of the pillars of Armenian diasporic musicology, Alahaidoian devotedly collected music from Armenians who emigrated to many different countries following the 1915 Armenian Genocide. This archive includes the materials Alahaidoian collected during his fieldwork in many countries, embracing a large geography, from Armenia to the USA, from Lebanon and Syria, to Belgium and France. This is a rich collection of recordings, transcriptions, and documents that allow us to better appreciate Armenian diasporic folk music and its roots. Evidently, many volumes will be required to accommodate such a rich collection.

Conferences and festivals
The Komitas International Conference-Festival is held annually in Yerevan. Traditionally, 7-8 October are the dates of the conference, corresponding to Komitas’s birthday in the Julian calendar (26 September in the Gregorian calendar). Each year the conference reflects on Komitas, his life and work, and, importantly, the fields of activity in which he was engaged, namely, folk music, church music, art music, and music pedagogy. In this framework, the conference hosts the research of music scholars from different countries who present papers about their folk music, church chants, and art music. Selected proceedings are published in the Komitas Museum-Institute Yearbook, which in 2023 released its eighth volume.

In 2023, the 95th birthday of Armenian ethnomusicologist Gevorg Geodakyan (1928–2015) was celebrated. A conference was held in his memory on 19 September in Yerevan, featuring papers not only on Geodakyan’s work and research, but also on broader topics of folk music and ethnomusicology.

The Sayat-Nova Festival was held on 17–18 June 2023 at the Haghpat Monastery, in the north of Armenia. The event included workshops on Sayat-Nova music and concerts, which embraced both traditional and modern performances of the works of ashough Sayat-Nova (1712–1795) who lived and worked at the Haghpat Monastery.

The Gutan Festival is one of the most beloved events in the country, which annually hosts various song, dance, and instrumental performances presented by various solo performers, ensembles, and groups. Each year, performers present a variety of folk music. Since 2020 this festival had to be postponed due to both the pandemic and the war. In August 2023, the festival was held again after a three-year-long hiatus.

Dances
In recent years, folk dance research and dissemination have become very popular in Armenia. Scholars continuously collect dances performed in everyday life, and some are recovering dances from archival recordings and from older collections which include descriptions of folk dances in written format. Interestingly, many new dances or variations of previously known ones are apparently being recovered, and some of them are also being staged.

In addition to dance research, the dance performance tradition continues to be current in Armenia. Each month, the “We and Our Dances” social initiative gathers hundreds of people who visit the event to learn to dance.

SFE organised its annual in-person encounter over three days in Lyon, on 22-24 September 2023, in a partnership with Musée des Confluences, CMTRA, Jean-Monnet Saint-Etienne and Lyon II universities, to held the symposium “Compren dre et rêver le monde en musique: l’imaginaire de l’ethnomusicologie” [Understanding and dreaming the world in music: The imagination of ethnomusicology].

The society also contributed to fieldwork missions (especially for young researchers) and to the publication of multimedia resources (i.e., documentary films) and monographs. Among them are Systématique de la polyrythmie malinké by Julien André (Peeters Publishers), Fragments accordés: La composition musicale contemporaine et le monde arabe by Anis Fariji (Diacritiques Éditions) and the special issue “Terrains Com muns: Ethnomusicologie et Popular Music Studies” of the journal Volume!

SFE also took part in the project “Recherches en musique, collaborations entre jeunes chercheurs/chercheuses et artistes” [Research in music, collaborations between young researchers and artists] in partnership with other academic societies focusing on music.

As usual, SFE collaborated with Ateliers d’Ethnomusicologie in Geneva, Switzerland, to publish the 36th volume of Cahiers d’ethnomusicologie (2023).
In addition to these various scientific events and publications, SFE also contributed to the 2023 edition of the Jean Rouch International Film Festival. For current information, please visit SFE’s Facebook page and its website www.ethnomusicologie.fr.

Iran

The ICTMD office in Tehran conducted a summer workshop for students and professionals interested in Iranian traditional and folk music. The workshops took place in Tehran on 6–12 August 2023, and were delivered in the English language.

Workshops included practical lessons in dastgāhs from the Iranian Radif on santūr, and Iranian rhythmic cycles on the tombak percussion instrument. Participants also enjoyed lectures on Persian musical structures, Iranian organology, and Iranian music in its cultural context. Participants also visited the homes of professional Iranian musicians and the Tehran Museum of Musical Instruments. This summer workshop was the second formal ICTMD workshop in Iran. I hope we can organise more events like this in upcoming years.

There will be an event introducing ICTMD activities and its various Study Groups in the city of Karaj in January 2024. Participants will mostly include music students at different academic levels. The event will be free of charge and will be conducted by myself—Mohammad R. Azadehfar—at the Faculty of Music of the University of Art in Tehran.

Jordan

by Fadi Al-Ghawanmeh, Liaison Officer

This report highlights three innovative, locally-focused initiatives in Jordan, concentrated on capacity-building in music technology within both the academic and non-governmental sectors. These initiatives are particularly relevant in an era marked by rapid advancements in music technology, where artificial intelligence (AI) is increasingly becoming a vital tool in areas such as analysis, composition, education, and interactive performance.

The importance of a locally-centred approach is underscored by Magnusson’s (2021) assertion that musical concepts specific to a region are integral to its music technologies, and these concepts extend to other musical cultures as these technologies are adopted. This phenomenon is evident in the context of Arab maqām music, where, as Hussien et al. (2014) have observed, the lack of technologies designed for or adapted to this musical tradition has led to a tendency towards Western styles in the practice and production of Arab music. This issue remains prominent in the current era of data-driven technology. AI advancements allow for new possibilities to work towards music decolonisation in the Arab world. Any such initiatives, however, need to employ a deep understanding of AI while also localising it for an Arab context. This process can boost Arab music’s global representation, empower local musicians, preserve maqām practices, and create infrastructures and tools that are independent from Western interests.

The first initiative is spearheaded by the University of Jordan’s Music Department, in partnership with international collaborators. This multifaceted initiative encompasses research, capacity building, and education. The goal is to transform the department into a global centre for AI-driven music research and education, emphasising Arab maqām mu-music. This, in turn, aims to foster both collaboration and competition in the Arab region within this burgeoning field.

Developed through international partnerships, the initiative focuses on advancing music technology education at various levels. It involves sponsoring one doctoral project and joint supervision of master’s theses, alongside developing an undergraduate curriculum in Music Technology. Specifically, a faculty member from the University of Jordan’s Music Department is enrolled in a joint PhD programme between the University of Oslo and the University of Lorraine. He conducts experimentation at the RITMO Centre and Musicology Department at the University of Oslo, and at the LORIA Laboratory for Computer Science at the University of Lorraine. His objective is to create an AI-based aesthetic feedback loop specifically for Arab tarab music. This involves AI-generated instrumental improvisations responsive to audience feedback collected via motion-capture devices.

Additionally, two master’s students are collaboratively supervised by professors from the University of Jordan’s Music Department and the University of Lorraine’s LORIA Laboratory. They utilise insights from the research conducted by the aforementioned PhD candidate, and work on projects that enhance music generation and its application in education. An undergraduate concentration in music technology, supported partly by the Association of Francophone Universities, is also being established, focusing on the application of AI in music. This initiative will be showcased at the 32nd Arab Music Conference in Cairo, with the intention of inspiring future collaborative endeavours both regionally and globally. More information is available in this document.

The second initiative presented in this report is the establishment of a Digital Arts Department at Yarmouk University. The department head, Nidal Obaidat, announced the commencement of a bachelor’s programme in digital arts. He emphasised that although the programme will be wide-ranging, it currently only covers the digital aspects of music and cinema, and will later cover design and visual arts. He added that the programme will greatly enhance the level of technological expertise in music, especially within the artistic and musical communities. This enhancement is especially prominent in areas such as audio engineering and music production. Obaidat also mentioned the programme’s commitment to serving students in Jordan and the broader region. It’s worth noting that Yarmouk University has been conferring bachelor’s and master’s degrees in music for many years through the faculty of Fine Arts, precisely where the department of Music was established in 1981.

The third highlighted initiative in this report is “[Digital] Transmissions,” an annual artistic development programme designed to create development and exhibit prospects for artists in Jordan within the realm of digital art. Simultaneously, it aims to broaden cultural networks between Jordan and the UK, facilitated by organising partners, including the Jordan National Gallery of Fine Arts, the British Council in Jordan, FutureEverything in the UK, and the MetaFour.
Artist Collective in Jordan. Khaldoun Hijazin, the director of art and cultural programmes in the gallery, emphasised that each year, the programme accommodates a group of 12 creative personnel, including three music artists, chosen by a panel of art experts through an open invitation for participation. The programme encourages multidisciplinary investigations in sound and music, visual art, performance, and public art projects, exploring ways to leverage the tech sector and its emerging innovations.

Hijazin mentioned that, among this year’s workshops, there will be one specifically focused on AI tools in sound and music. He also highlighted that raising awareness about the significance of AI decolonisation in the fine arts is a key objective of this artistic initiative, which will be evident in its workshops. It is important to note that, although the programme is accessible to artists based in Jordan, it is not exclusively aimed at individuals of Jordanian nationality. This implies that artists from the region and beyond are also welcome to participate.

Ultimately, we hope that these new initiatives, along with others that we anticipate will follow, will improve the infrastructures that allow for innovative artworks, environments, and traditions of musical practice in Jordan and across the broader Middle East region. It is critical to use AI in ways that are primarily human-centred, enhancing musicians’ artistic tools and meeting the growing expectations of their audiences. With these goals in mind, such projects in Jordan strive towards decolonisation by developing local infrastructures and methods for preserving maqām practices with the new opportunities afforded by AI.

Malta

by Philip Ciantar, Liaison Officer

As in previous years, the School of Performing Arts at the University of Malta has consistently upheld its commitment to fostering knowledge and appreciation of the world’s traditions of music and dance.

The Department of Dance Studies at this school has recently hosted visiting scholars who are members of the ICTMD Study Group on Ethnochoreology, to present their research at said department. These included Sevi Bayraktar from Hochschule für Musik und Tanz Köln (Germany), who delivered a presentation titled “Popular Dance and Music in Times of Trouble: Dissenting Arts and Public Mobilisation in Turkey.” Another visiting scholar was Lucy Hayashi, Head of Dance at HAMU (Prague), who contributed sessions on Dance Forms and Practices, Choreological Perspectives, and Foundations of Choreography. She also spoke about her work in Japanese dance. Jeanette Mollenhauer (Australian independent dance scholar) was another visiting scholar affiliated with the Ethnochoreology Study Group, who presented her research “Immigration and Dance in Australia” to the Dance Anthropology class.

In light of the collaboration between the Departments of Music and Dance Studies within the same school, Deborah Williams, Senior Lecturer in Dance Studies and ICTMD member, delivered a presentation to undergraduate ethnomusicology students. Her presentation covered various definitions of dance from an anthropological perspective, followed by an exploration of an analytical method for studying dance. Additionally, Williams engaged in several other activities, including presenting a paper at the Ethnochoreology Study Group in 2022 in Brežice, Slovenia. She also recently established a module on Dance Anthropology for the Department of Anthropological Sciences at the University of Malta, which commenced in Autumn 2023.

The Music Studies Department conducted various activities, including an onsite field session with Celtic Connections Malta in March 2023, which involved the participation of a number of undergraduate ethnomusicology students. The Celtic Connection convenes weekly at diverse venues across Malta, engaging in informal sessions centred around traditional music, with a repertoire mostly composed of jigs, reels, hornpipes, waltzes, and polkas. During this session, students had the opportunity to observe the ensemble rehearsing, interacting with musicians, and witnessing the group’s monthly international Zoom session which connects them with musicians from the USA, UK, Greece, and France—a practice born during the Covid lockdown. Also, during the academic year 2022-23, undergraduate students in Mediterranean Music Studies had the opportunity to participate in a practical session on flamenco and rhythm led by Maltese flamenco dancer Deborah Falzon (see photo).

In March 2023, the School of Performing Arts at the University of Malta hosted its three-day-long international annual conference. Themed “Body Knowledges: Praxis, Politics, Performance,” the conference was convened by Jeremy Coleman and Mika Lillit Lior from the Departments of Music and Dance Studies, respectively. It focused on embodied epistemology and praxis in the performing arts (dance, theatre, music) as well as the performance of politics and the political dimensions of performance in the past, present, and future. It is noteworthy that a significant number of papers presented during this conference drew upon examples from world music and dance. These examples showed how the performing arts provide distinct modes and methods for challenging ideas concerning the body, knowledge constitution, and valuation.

The year 2023 also saw the publication of two books that originated from postgraduate research conducted at the Department of Music Studies (University of Malta). Juan Sebastián Correa Cáceres’s book The Aulos in Classical and Late Antiquity: Acculturation, Diffusion, and Syncretism in Socio-Musical Processes of the Mediterranean (Logos Verlag Berlin), offers a comprehensive study of the aulos, drawing parallels between past practices and contemporary music-related phenomena. Simon Farrugia’s The Maltese Wind Band: A Musical Tradition and Its Practice Today (McFarland) delves into the history and evolution of Maltese wind bands and their role today in Maltese culture and society.

At the national level, the 2023 “Ritmu” Festival took place on 2–10 June. The programme, curated by artistic director Andrew Alamango, showcased the musical talents of instrumentalists hailing from around the Mediterranean. It seamlessly blended traditional Maltese folk music with contemporary sounds and offered workshops tailored for children, among other attractions. Moreover, throughout the festival days, attendees were encouraged to immerse themselves in traditional Maltese ghana music, experiencing it in its authentic setting. Furthermore, an exhibition dedicated to one of this musical genre’s notable past singers, the late Mikiel Abela, known as “Il-Bambimu,” provided insights into the history of ghana music.

Mozambique

by Marílio Wane, Liaison Officer

After a relatively long period of inactivity, largely caused by the pandemic and the respective impacts it had on the lives of people and institutions around the world, the ICTMD representation in Mozambique has been going through a time of resumption and projection for the future. Also in the context of the pandemic, its members actively participated in the organisation and holding of the symposium of the ICTMD Study Group on African Musics, themed “Dialogue of African Music and Cultures Through Time and Space,” held online on 13–18 June 2022. The event had previously been scheduled to take place in Maputo, the capital of Mozambique, in 2021, but it had to be cancelled due to the global health crisis, which prevented all kinds of face-to-face meetings. However, the online format ran satisfactorily, with Mozambican speakers taking part.

The presence of Mozambican researchers also grew significantly, marked by even greater participation in the 47th ICTMD World Conference, held in Legon, Ghana, in July 2023. This meeting resulted in two important recommendations for re-articulating Mozambican representation: the creation of a National Committee, with the aim of bringing together the main players and stakeholders in the field; as well as liaising with ethnomusicologists from the so-called “Lusophone Africa,” or more specifically, Portuguese-speaking African countries or PALOP. It was recommended to collaborate with other organisations and institutions operating in Mozambique and with which ICTMD shares the same values and mission.
To this end, we identified the Mozambican Association for Education in Musical Arts (SMEAM) as a possible partner, whose president of the Technical and Scientific Council, Joaquim Gove, presented a paper at the Legon conference. Joined by three other researchers, Timóteo Cuche, Fernão Orlando, and Cristiano Tsope (all PhD students in ethnomusicology at the Universidade Nova in Lisbon, Portugal), this delegation registered Mozambique’s largest participation in the Council’s main event. SMEAM was founded in 2019 with the aim to bring together music teaching professionals, promote and defend their interests, advocate for musical arts education, and promote research and knowledge about musical practices and their teaching in the country. SMEAM has its provisional headquarters at the School of Communication and Arts (ECA) of Eduardo Mondlane University in Maputo, and its members are lecturers from this and other higher learning institutions.

In 2022 SMEAM began a mapping project to assess the objective situation of music education in Mozambique. As part of this project, it promoted six public online debates with various stakeholders with a focus on state institutions, culminating in the 1st International Conference on Music Education, where four state institutions related to arts education participated in a roundtable in which they presented the government’s vision for arts education in Mozambique. In 2023, SMEAM organised the 2nd series of public online debates, aimed more at stakeholders outside the country’s governance system and strictly linked to musical arts education.

Therefore, in this resumption of activities, a close collaboration with the aforementioned partners will be the main strategy for consolidating ICTMD in Mozambique in the coming years.

1st Maputo Lutherie Forum

The 1st Maputo Lutherie Forum was held on 8 December 2023, with the aim of bringing together artists, researchers, communicators, and others to discuss practices and knowledge in the musical instrument construction and repair sector. The event was organised as part of MIMO’s “Women, Musical Instruments, and Crafts” project, coordinated by musician, luthier, and cultural activist Clelio Vilankulos. It was held at ECA’s auditorium. The audience was made up mainly of lecturers and students from the university’s music programme, artists in general, and the general public who followed the online broadcast.

The session began with a presentation of the MIMO project, attended by the faculty’s management and representatives of the organisations managing the ProCultura project, funded by the European Union and implemented through the Camões Institute. A promotional video was shown summarising the project from the point of view of its values, objectives, and intended results. One of its strengths is the promotion of dialogue between culture-makers and academia, in order to fulfil its role of producing knowledge in conjunction with the various players and sectors of society. In this respect, it was very timely to open the oral presentations with the experience reports of two notable music artists and instrument builders working in Maputo.

Celso Mahuaie and Ivan Mucavele opened the session by introducing the audience to their long journeys and experiences in this field. The former, an accomplished instrumentalist, mbira maker, and member of the Timbila Muzimba and Timbila Tathu ensembles, addressed, among other issues, the problem of access to the raw materials needed to make the instrument. Specifically, he discussed the mwenje, the tree from which the wood is extracted to make the keys that produce the distinctive sound of the mbira, compared to other xylophones. This debate gave rise to an even bigger one, which is the current state of Timbila safeguarding policies, as defined in the context of its addition to UNESCO’s Representative List of the Intangible Cultural Heritage of Humanity in 2005. In summary, it was concluded that many of the expected actions were not being done, as established by UNESCO’s 2003 Convention.

Mahuaie was followed by Ivan Mucavele, a musician, mbira maker, and cultural activist who spoke about his career in the area, highlighting the role of activism in building a movement to valorise traditional Mozambican music, to which he has made a significant contribution. Starting with his individual career (influenced by his family members, including Luka Mucavele, and a period of living in Zimbabwe), the musician traced a historical line that led him to join various groups in Maputo City, such as Waka Mbira, Modern Mbira, and the Musicians’ Association, until he consolidated his own studio “Mukhambira” in the village of Marracuene. In his presentation he conveyed the fundamental message that the valorisation of the national cultural heritage, particularly musical heritage, depends, among other things, on the militant efforts of those who set out to fight for it.

The rich explanations were followed by a mbira performance by Mahuaie. The programme continued with the presentation of themes for reflection and debate, which were followed by group dynamics with the audience around each of the four themes presented by the speakers.

First, anthropologist Marílio Wane, a researcher at the Institute for Socio-Cultural Research (Ministry of Education and Culture) and ICTMD’s Liaison Officer for Mozambique, presented the topic “Musical Instruments and the Construction of Mozambican Cultural Identity,” in which he emphasised the political decision-making processes underlying the construction of an idea of a country/national identity. Starting with the case of the Timbila and its long-standing presence in national symbols such as currency, Wane proposed the audience to reflect on other cultural expressions “constructed” as a symbol of identity. Taking advantage of this approach, the next speaker, Eva Trindade, spoke about the role of the media in fixing and reproducing certain symbolic contents and values which, as seen above, are politically and historically “constructed.”

Like Mucavele before, the musician May Mbira has a remarkable career in the movement to practice, valorise, and publicise the mbira as a traditional Mozambican instrument. During his presentation, he described part of this journey, during which he was part of the same collectives as Mucavele, and then specialised in exchange, fusion, and dialogue with other cultural production circuits, such as electronic music. It was precisely in this field that her collaboration with Guillermo de Llera, a doctoral student in ethnomusicology at the Universidade Nova in Lisbon, emerged. In her exhibition, May Mbira presented two products of this collaboration: a comic strip narrating the experience of the research and the meeting between the two participants, and the instrument built from this interaction: the MidiMbira, of which she brought some sound examples on video.

Since the theme of one of the online debate sessions of the 1st Maputo Luthéric Forum was “Social Justice in the Provision of Services and the Personal and Professional Development of Music Teaching Professionals and Performers”, Joaquim Gove discussed—on behalf of SMEAM—the relevance of professional organisations in the professionalisation of their members and of the disciplinary or professional area, focusing on the need for music professionals (particularly those in teaching) to engage with the organisation in order to better think about the regulation of their practice and consequent professionalisation.

The discussions and deliberations on setting up an ICTMD National Committee for Mozambique and liaising with researchers and institutions from other PALOP countries will be left to the first few months of 2024, when the next steps will be outlined in coordination with the ICTMD Secretariat.

Desde 2015, el Grupo de Trabajo en Tradiciones Musicales de la SIBE-Sociedad de Etnomusicología representa al Comité Nacional de España del ICTMD (anteriormente lo representaba la propia SIBE). Desde noviembre de 2023 el Comité Nacional es coordinado por una Junta Directiva integrada por Susana Moreno (Presidenta), Herminia Arredondo (Vocal) y Francisco J. García (Secretario).

Actividades

En estos dos últimos años (2022 y 2023) han visto la luz los habituales números de Trans: Revista Transcultural de Música, publicación científica de la SIBE, y de ETNO-Cuadernos de Etnomusicología, revista de divulgación y noticias de esta sociedad.

La actividad de ICTMD-España y de sus miembros, así como de la SIBE, se ha plasmado en varios eventos. Entre ellos cabe destacar, por un lado, la Jornada SIBE 2022 Eurovisión: Fandom, artificio y transmedialidad, celebrada en la Universidad Complutense de Madrid los días 12 y 13 de diciembre y reseñada en el volumen 17(2) de ETNO. Por otro lado, el XVII Congreso SIBE / IV Congreso ICTM-España / XII Congreso IASPM-España, fue celebrado bajo el título “A la escucha de nuestro presente: una cartografía de las culturas musicales en el siglo XXI” en la Universidad de Granada entre los días 2 y 4 de noviembre de 2023. La ciudad de Granada acogió por segunda vez un congreso de la SIBE, después de celebrado en 1998.

El encuentro de 2023 tenía como objetivo proponer herramientas metodológicas, conceptuales y teórico-prácticas para examinar los fenómenos sonoros del presente. Además, en esta edición se estableció una modalidad de participación propia para jóvenes investigadores, quienes acudieron en gran número. La buena acogida a la convocatoria de SIBE, después de estos años previos de pandemia y restricciones, posibilitó que durante los tres días tuvieran lugar en algunos momentos hasta cinco sesiones paralelas.

El Comité Científico estuvo integrado por un grupo de investigadores pertenecientes a universidades de España y Portugal: Complutense de Madrid, La Laguna, Huelva, Granada, Valladolid, Jaén, Autónoma de Barcelona, Oviedo, Internacional de Valencia, Universidad de Aveiro y Universidad Nova de Lisboa.

El congreso se articuló en sesiones de comunicaciones y paneles, con presentaciones en español, portugués e inglés, además de las Asambleas de ICTM-España, IASPM-España y la Asamblea de socios SIBE. También incluyó la Ramón Pelinski Lecture bajo el título “Lo que el flamenco nos enseña”, impartida por Pedro G. Romero, y la sesión plenaria “Música y estados sensibles: habitar la creatividad en la urgencia capitalista”, ofrecida por Alicia Álvarez Vaquero.

Uno de los paneles del congreso fue dedicado a debatir las “contradicciones y problemáticas del campo etnomusicológico en el estado español”. Por lo demás, las sesiones de comunicaciones y los paneles se organizaron en torno a las temáticas que se sintetizan a continuación: (a) Músicas populares urbanas: géneros musicales actuales; manifestaciones en la península Ibérica y en América Latina; gestión y programación musical; procesos de producción, mediación, recepción e imaginarios; música y acción política; música y cuerpo; resignificaciones y apropiaciones musicales; (b) Tradiciones musicales: miradas contemporáneas; procesos recientes; música y duelo; nuevos enfoques sobre pedagogía y tradiciones musicales; humor, identidad y tradición en el folclore urbano; y (c) Música, memoria, identidades y redes: identidades e imaginarios en Portugal; redes musicales en la hisfonía; comunidad y red; circulación musical y políticas; memoria y resentimiento en las nuevas músicas de Cabo Verde, Mozambique y Goa. Otras propuestas versaron sobre educación musical, construcciones de género, música y diásporas, aproximaciones a la música académica occidental, o música, tecnología y medios audiovisuales, con sesiones destinadas a campos emergentes como la ludomusicología y la inteligencia artificial.

Varios investigadores e investigadoras que forman parte del Comité ICTMD-España participaron en el congreso como miembros de su Comité Científico, moderadores y comunicantes en las distintas sesiones y paneles con estas interesantes aportaciones:

* “Reciprocidades entre los estudios académicos y repertorios de tradición oral: la Sibil · Ia, Goigs de Pasqua, Missa de to Pascal i Sant Antoni (Mallorca) como marcos de interacción”. Bárbara Duran Bordoy.

Audiovisual Ethnomusicology

by George Mürer, on behalf of Study Group

The ICTMD Study Group on Audiovisual Ethnomusicology convened its third symposium on 1–3 September 2023 at the University College Cork in Cork, Ireland, whose majestic foliage and towering tree boughs were especially vivid during the uncharacteristically sunny three days of our meeting. Scholars and filmmakers from Brazil, Canada, China, Cuba, Finland, Italy (with Sardinia notably represented), Mexico, Portugal, Slovakia, Spain, and the USA presented papers and films reflecting on methodology, ethics, representation, and the nature of the medium/media.

The conference opened with warm welcomes from chair Leonardo D’Amico and hosts Jonathan Stock and Jeffrey Wheeter, followed by an invigorating performance of pieces for the Chinese pipa, played by Mengwei Zhang and Wenqiu Chen, and for the Afghan rubab, played by Hamid Wentzel, a student of Ustad Daud Khan Sadozai.

The conference programme included two keynote presentations. Helen Rees (UCLA) spoke about the process of creating a film, in cinematographic collaboration with Aparna Sharma, about the perspectives and musical personhood of her longtime teacher, Dai Shuhong, a master of Chinese bamboo flute and bridge-less zither. Rees described the evolution of the film’s structure, the input of its subjects (including Dai Shuhong, his family, and herself), and the sensitivity and creative thinking that proved instrumental in shaping the film.

In his keynote, Giorgio Biancorosso (Hong Kong University) reflected in great depth on Wong Kar-wai’s use of Xavier Cugat’s recording of “Perfidia” in Days of Being Wild. Biancorosso argued that, rather than merely scoring the story and complementing Christopher Doyle’s ever-atmospheric cinematography, the music and its zeitgeist exert a guiding effect on how the film is experienced, pointing to an engagement with earlier French and Italian movements in cinematic innovation.

The opening panel (featuring Xin Weibo and Su Xiouyin) and second paper session (with presentations from Dujiukun Yan and He Hua) focused, from different angles, on the intersection between ceremonial occasions of communal import among minorities in South China, and government policies and changes to the physical and civic structuring of local conurbations, and what this has meant for ethnographers and processes of documentation.
The first paper session looked at issues of ethics, ideology, and representation, with extremely candid reflections from Kai Viljami Åberg on trust, stereotyping, and documentation, in his work with Roma musicians in Finland. George Mürer drew on experiences with Kurdish and Amazigh musicians and communities, and questions of how production values are implicated in the ways they wish and do not wish to be represented. Diego Pani delved into nuances of sonic experience that come to the fore while digitising David MacDougal’s ethnographic film work carried out in Sardinia in the early 1990s.

The third and fourth paper sessions explored diverse media forums, with Brad Osborn interrogating genre and representations of Black American musical culture and artistry in early 1990s, pre-Yo! MTV Raps, and with Julian Grey and Ricardo Gonzalez looking at contemporary forms of audio-visual social media. Grey focused on live-streamed drag performances as expressions of gender euphoria in the United States while Gonzalez concentrated on popular engagements with lip-syncing via TikTok in Mexico. Marta Fernandez examined how temporarily disallowed participatory expressions of Asturian culture through music and dance in Spain shifted to a virtual domain during the Covid-19 pandemic. Maria Eugenia Domínguez highlighted contrasts between musical and non-musical ritual sound in Guarani arete guaso ceremonies in Western Paraguay, with an emphasis on how her documentation was supported and guided by the community.

Marco Lutzu and Diego Pani conducted a workshop where they demonstrated multi-camera interview and audio recording techniques, with Ricardo Gonzalez serving as a test subject, while expounding on the history of punk rock in Mexico City.

The latter portion of each day was devoted to film screenings, with a number of common themes emerging. Several of the films could be described as collaborative depictions of community settings and experiences. Frank Gunderson’s Beloved Youth of Many Days: Stories About Mimiani Park Orchestra is a labour of love covering decades of the careers of an iconic dance music big band in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, spun through an interweaving of live and studio recorded music and extensive oral histories narrating the ups and downs of the band, and ultimately, their significance within the cultural and political landscape of Tanzania.

Oral history and archival preservation is also core to Xulia Feixoo Martínez’s Axudámede De Cantar: Four Stories About Oral Traditional Music in Galicia, which explores the role of song and drumming in the communal rhythms of local communities, foregrounding both memory and movements to re-imagine the idiom within a contemporary mediascape. Miguel Angel García Velasco’s Eggun pa’cha cha documents the ceremonial respects paid to a recently departed Cuban rumba musician of towering stature, Esteban Vega Baccalao, made at the invitation of his community. Zhiyi Qiaoqiao Cheng’s Homecoming: A Record of Soundscape and Livelihood of Spring Festival in a Kam Village, follows a young urban labourer in a zipper factory as she returns to her home village for a days-long Spring festival organised around numerous ceremonial events and festivities, necessitating intensive preparations, which themselves constitute vital social nodes and perpetuate a sense of traditional cultural expression for this minority community in Southern China.

The co-construction of music videos with musicians as a form of ethnography and reciprocal exchange was another theme common to several of the films screened. Petr Nuska’s Hopa Lide has been a close collaboration with Roma professional musicians in Slovakia, providing an intimate perspective on the environments in which they work—performing, practicing, planning, and actively imagining their personae through a series of music videos that they conceive and the filmmaker executes with their participation. Dario Ranocchiari’s Video-Musicking al-Andalus is structured around a triptych of such projects, in this case, as politically motivated overtures to tapping into a deep-rooted consciousness of pre-1492 Andalusia as a more dynamically multicultural phase in the history of this geography.

Personal odysseys are the heart of both Diego Pani’s The Search and Yuri Prado’s Open Gasy. The former follows two Sardinian musicians and blues connoisseurs as they simultaneously compete in a multi-sited blues talent competition and seek out intimate encounters with blues musicians and culture in Clarksdale, Memphis, and New Orleans. Open Gasy centres a Malagasy guitarist now living in France and his encounters with the “world music” industry as festival performer and recording artist.

Other films portrayed multifaceted musical milieus, as with Giacomo Boschi’s Primo Nota Etnografika—short, celebratory glimpse into the revitalisation of traditional lute and bagpipe repertoires in Greece. Leonardo D’Amico’s Bulang Music: From the Mountains to the Stars reveals a multiplicity of modes of cultural representation cultivated within the Bulang minority in South China. Daniele Zappatore’s Carang Pring Walung frames central Java’s gamelan calung bamboo ensemble in an in-depth ethnomusicological portrait fashioned through the perspectives of master performer, composer, and teacher Darno.
On the final day, the conference honoured the late Terada Yoshitaka with a screening of his film Crossing Over the Arirang Pass, structured around a concert giving voice to Japan’s community of Zainchi Koreans, with participants trained in different arts, from Pansori to North Korean Opera, reflecting on their personal histories and experience in Japanese society.

The next symposium of the ICTMD Study Group on Audiovisual Ethnomusicology will convene in Xiamen, China, in 2025.

Ethnochoreology

by Placida Staro, Study Group Chair

The ICTMD Study Group on Ethnochoreology currently has 313 members representing 61 countries. In 2023, the Study Group celebrated the very successful World Conference in Legon, Ghana, especially the decision by the General Assembly to change our organisation’s name to include “Dance.” Congratulations to our past Study Group Chair and longtime activist Catherine Foley for contributing to this process.

The Study Group on Ethnochoreology has six Sub-Study Groups (SSG), of which five are active in forums, discussions, and publications. The Study Group’s Executive Committee organised a meeting with the leaders of the six SSGs, and each was invited to describe their activity strategies, challenges, and best practices.

Egil Bakka, Secretary of the SSG on Round Dances of the 19th Century Derived Couple Dances [sic] reported that the group published the volume Waltzing Through Europe in 2020, online with open access. The group met in Prague on 2–4 December 2022, hosted by Daniela Stavělová and Dorota Gremlicová. Bakka shared his experience working in small Study Groups in ICTMD and elsewhere. He believes that SSGs work best with focused discussions—one or a few persons define a precise and narrow topic, work a plan for the group, and invite others to join them on that topic. When an SSG starts with a very open and broad topic and with an open invitation to anyone vaguely interested, then the group spends most of its time discussing what to work with and how to work, or the group ends as a mini-conference, and the presentations are usually too far apart to initiate concrete collaboration.

Daniela Stavělová shared a report by Mehmet Ocal Özbek and Izumi Fairbanks on the SSG on Field Research

Theory and Methods. Their main project was a joint field research trip in Türkiye and Georgia on 13–23 October 2023 [Editor’s note: See report by the Study Group on Music and Dance in Southeastern Europe on pages 29–30]. A joint research team of Czech and Slovene colleagues visited the international festival in Strážnice, Czechia (25–26 June 2022) and the Jurevanje festivity in Črnomelj, Bela Krajina, Slovenia (24–25 June 2023). The research team observed both festivals from different positions determined by age, gender, and insider/outsider positions. Comparisons of field notes were made, and the different missions of the festivals were discussed.

János Fügedi and Siri Mæland reported on the SSG for Movement Analysis. Numerous activities somewhat related to the SSG are going on and engaging its members. There has been a lot of interest in this field since the Study Group’s symposium in 2022 in Slovenia, with many students interested in analysis. The book Dance Structures (2007) by this SSG, edited by Adrienne Kaeppler and Elsie Ivancich Dunin, remains on demand. Several members of the SSG participate in a “Creative Europe” EU grant. SSGs might find that securing grant money for concrete projects can be a powerful strategy for building project energy, if they have the necessary momentum to initiate such projects.

Daniela Ivanova-Nyberg noted that the Sub-Study Group on Dance and Diaspora was officially launched on 8 November 2022, thus being the youngest SSG. Nearly 30 scholars responded during an online discussion in August 2022 about the group’s structure and goals. They were all interested in discussing classical and new texts on diaspora and learning about the findings from our fieldwork. The group initiated an online book club on Dance and Diaspora, meeting bimonthly, starting on 25 November 2022, and has created six book club discussions ever since. A shared library was established, hosted by Christos Papakostas of University of Ioannina, Greece.

The meetings are recorded and shared with the membership so that everyone unable to attend the discussion can still be part of the group’s activities. Announcements are posted on the Facebook group for the ICTMD Study Group on Ethnochoreology.

The Study Group on Ethnochoreology is now planning for their upcoming symposium in July 2024 in Izmir, Türkiye. Many proposals have been submitted, and the Programme Committee is currently reviewing them.

Mediterranean Music Studies

by Vanessa Paloma Elbaz, Study Group Chair

In 1993, the International Council for Traditional Music formally recognised the Study Group known today as Mediterranean Music Studies (MMS). MMS was founded by Tullia Magrini at a 1992 conference organised by the ICTM National Committee for Italy, with the support of the Fondazione Olga e Ugo Levi in Venice. The group, which was a confluence of ethnomusicologists, historical musicologists, and anthropologists, was originally known as the Study Group on Anthropology of Music in Mediterranean Cultures. To commemorate this milestone, which precisely coincides with a moment of change on the Executive Committee, in coming Chair Vanessa Paloma Elbaz and Vice Chair Salvatore Morra are delighted to announce an online gathering with the participation of some of the founding and early members of the Study Group.

The meeting (see below for Zoom information) will take place on Zoom on 23 January 2024, between 17:00 and 19:00 (GMT). Open to current and former Study Group members, as well as to the wider ICTMD community, the gathering is an opportunity to trace the development of the study of the music of the Mediterranean and new directions in the scholarly conversation that members can glean from the last thirty years.

The early meetings of the MMS Study Group included scholars such as Philip Bohlman, Salwa El-Shawan Castelo Branco, Ruth Davis (Chair 2014–2023), Iain Fenlon, Bruno Nettl, Svanibor Pettan, Donatella Restani, Amnon Shiloah, Marcello Sorce-Keller (Chair 2007–2014), Nico Staiti, Erich Stockmann, Martin Stokes, and others.

* Topic: ICTMD Mediterranean Music Study Group 30th Commemoration
* Time: Jan 23, 2024 05:00 PM London
* Link: zoom.us
* Meeting ID: 995 4358 0176
* Passcode: 076597

In preparation for the meeting, we include an English translation of a section from the preface of Antropologia della musica nelle culture mediterranee: interpretazione, performance, identità: alla memoria di Tullia Magrini, by Philip V. Bohlman, Marcello Sorce Keller, and Loris Azzaroni (eds.), Bologna, 2009, which explains the significance of Tullia Magrini’s contribution and the importance of the Study Group:

We arrive, then, at the Mediterranean. I see the development of her Mediterranean interests as part of the growth process I have just sketched, naturally leading to her founding, in 1992, of the Study Group of the International Council for Traditional Music concerned with the “Anthropology of Music in Mediterranean Cultures.” Establishing the Study Group was very timely, and it produced a turning point of sorts. By 2007 the Study Group had met seven times in Venice, sponsored and supported by the Fondazione Ugo e Olga Levi. Ruth Davis recently pointed out in a personal communication that, before it existed, scholars active in this area had no acute sense of how their work might be seen as complementary; some thought of themselves as Middle Eastern or Arab-music specialists; others as specialists of the Balkans, Greece, and so on. As a result, publications devoted to music of the Mediterranean began to appear, some by Tullia herself, but not exclusively so. In recent years, moreover, the number of centres for Mediterranean studies in general has proliferated. Tullia’s idea of the Mediterranean is quite intriguing indeed. She no longer looked at it from the point of view of global history, as Fernand Braudel had done, or as a culture-area or a set of culture areas, as the Oxford school of social anthropology had tended to do. Her position vis-à-vis the Mediterranean reformulated the basic problem: [T]he Mediterranean ... represents better than others a place in which one encounters countless diversities, and ... it enables us to observe the ways in which these diversities manage to coexist, ignore each other, know each other, come into conflict, or blend.

By looking at the Mediterranean as a kind of battleground from which culture patterns emerge from peaceful exchanges as much as from conflict and rejection, Tullia went on to suggest that it would be worth using the term “Mediterranean Music” in the strict sense only for those musical phenomena that have their roots in the contact and contamination between cultural realities which actually come from different parts of the Mediterranean. It might be productive to look at the Mediterranean as, possibly, the most problematic interaction area on earth. Tullia was quite right to believe that the Mediterranean is to be studied anthropologically and, at the same time, be regarded as an allegory for the most intricate forms of exchange, rejection, and conflict.

The Mediterranean, thus conceived, becomes a powerful metaphor for the study of musical processes at their greatest thickness and turbulence. Regardless of where in the world we discover a pattern of musical interaction, I should like to see whether anything comparable exists in the Mediterranean, and I should be surprised if it did not. This would be another way of saying that, in ethnomusicology, we all are to a greater or lesser degree already engaged in Mediterranean studies. In other words, there is more to Tullia’s legacy than her contributions to the scholarly literature.

A no less important part of her legacy are her endeavours that, by their very nature, remain works in progress. Surely the Study Group and the journal Music and Anthropology are cases in point. The journal is a pioneering web publication that makes possible the publication of audiovisual material, and which was born in symbiosis with the Study Group. Her publications, I believe, will retain their importance for the field of ethnomusicology. The Study Group and the journal will surely grow and transform themselves in order to answer to new needs. And that is as it should be. Tullia, like all those who initiate something new, was never a traditionally-minded person, and she was herself quite ready to innovate and move forward.

We look forward to a wide participation from ICTMD members, as we prepare for the study group’s next cycle of development and innovation.

Music and Dance in Southeastern Europe

by Mehmet Öcal Özbilgin & Izumi Fairbanks, on behalf of Study Group

The ICTMD Sub-Study Group on Music and Dance in the Black Sea Cultural Basin (of the Study Group on Music and Dance in Southeastern Europe) and the Sub-Study Group on Field Research Theory and Methods (of the Study Group on Ethnochoreology), jointly conducted fieldwork in Türkiye and Georgia on 13–23 October 2023, with the financial support of local municipalities. The fieldwork expedition was organised by ICTMD Türkiye (Mehmet Öcal Özbilgin–National Organizer, Abdullah Akat–Local Organizer, İdris Ersan Küçük–Secretary), with 11 participants from six different countries.

The Eastern Black Sea region comprises a natural environment with dance and music traditions. Additionally, educational foundations play an important role in the surviving dance and music traditions. Although there have been many ethnic and cultural layers and intersections across different regions of the Black Sea, there have been relatively few studies in the field of music and dance, until today. Therefore, we decided to explore new studies with the idea of discovering different perspectives on the links to the past of the Black Sea cultural basin. Seven ethnomusicologists and four ethnochoreologists joined the team, and that allowed us to rethink the music and dance in the Black Sea Cultural basin together. The research had three main themes with two different purposes: the ethnography of local peoples in the Eastern Black Sea region, and the study and documentation of village music/dance repertoire.

Field research was conducted in two countries, four cities (Trabzon, Rize, Artvin, Batumi), ten towns (Görele, Tonya, Sürmene, Maçka, Pazar, Çamlıhemşin, Fındıklı, Borçka, Kemalpaşa, Sarp), and 14 villages. As it was autumn, the research was undertaken indoors in educational foundations rather than in natural environments. Interviews were held with 39 dance resource persons, 34 music resource persons, and five instrument makers, about local dances and music. More than 20 dances with different variations were compiled and recorded from approximately 100 dancers. Monophonic and polyphonic traditional songs were compiled from resource persons. Interviews were held about the production and playing techniques of drums, zurna, kavak, accordion,
Music and Dance of the Slavic World

by Ulrich Morgenstern, Study Group Chair

The 4th Symposium of the ICTMD Study Group on Music and Dance of the Slavic World was held in hybrid form on 5–7 October in Prague, Czech Republic, by invitation of the Institute of Ethnology of the Czech Academy of Sciences in cooperation with the Institute of Choreology at the Faculty of Music and Dance, Academy of Performing Arts. The Local Arrangements Committee consisted of Matěj Kratochvíl and Zita Skořepová (Co-Chairs), Daniela Stavělová, and Zdeněk Vejvoda. The members of the Programme Committee were Zita Skořepová (Chair), Jana Ambrózová, Matěj Kratochvíl, Anastasiia Mazurenko, Ulrich Morgenstern, Łukasz Smoluch, and Ieva Weaver.

During the opening ceremony at the Lichtenštejnský palác, participants were welcomed by Jiří Woitsch (Director of the Institute of Ethnology of the Czech Academy of Sciences), Lucie Hayashi (Head of the Institute of Choreology of the Faculty of Music and Dance of the Academy of Performing Arts), Matěj Kratochvíl and Zita Skořepová (symposium’s Co-Chairs), and Ulrich Morgenstern (Study Group Chair). Morgenstern emphasised the particular role of Prague’s liberal intellectual environment for the development of folkloristics and ethnomusicology within the humanities.

During the sessions, a record number 30 speakers from ten countries discussed the themes of “Traditional Music and Dance: Identity, Politics, and Heritization” (11 papers); “Traditional Music and Dance in Pedagogy and Education” (6 papers); “Experience and Representation of War and Violence in Music, Dance, and in Ethnomusicology of Slavic-Speaking Countries” (3 papers); and “New Research” (3 papers). The programme included a presentation of the film Hopa Lide: An Ethnomusicological Documentary on (and with) Slovak Romani Musicians by Petr Nuska.

The full symposium programme, including abstracts, is available online. One paper, titled “Local and Foreign Traditional Dances in Academic Dance Education in Bulgaria and Germany” was cancelled. During the business meeting, the Study Group members discussed issues of publication strategies and internal communication.

The opening reception included a dance workshop brilliantly led by Laura Kolačkovská and supported by the Prague-based ensemble MusEquality, which is personally associated with the Faculty of Music and Dance. On the second day of the symposium the participants visited the Czech Museum of Music, receiving fascination and often unexpected insights in human inventiveness in the field of musical instruments.

The symposium participants, online and in person, enjoyed a most fruitful exchange in a welcoming and vivid atmosphere. I am particularly happy about the strong presence of many young participants from the Czech Republic and other countries, and I am sure they will feel welcome in our Study Group. Most of the participants were privileged to take part in the symposium in person, in the beautiful surroundings of the historical quarter of Prague’s Malá Strana (Lesser Town).

I am grateful to Matěj Kratochvíl, Zita Skořepová, and their teams. Their tireless efforts made the 4th Symposium of the ICTMD Study Group on Music and Dance of the Slavic World a great success and a memorable event for anyone involved.

This issue is an offer to be followed along the geographical lines where these comprehensive studies and essays have been situated. There are studies focusing on Vietnam, Indonesia, Thailand, Sri Lanka, Pakistan, Egypt, the Ukraine, the UK, and Italy. The issues has 11 contributions, 9 articles, and 2 review essays.

Emotion and Aesthetic Experience During the Performance Act: Explorations on the Making of Multipart Music

The articles in this book were selected through a double-blind peer-review process from the presentations at the 6th Symposium of the Study Group on Multipart Music, held in 2019 at the Academy of Music of the University of Sarajevo, Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The performance act allows us to discern emotion and aesthetic experience in the most intensive moment of the music-making process. In multipart music practices, this happens through the coordination of individual ways of music making within a group. This situation causes tension, contributing essentially to the complexity of this particular moment, in which social relationships are also performed.

Experience and Expectation: The “Future From the Past” in Music Making

Among the understandings that support the perspectives in the contributions to this book are St. Augustine’s characterisation of “time as a feature of the human spirit and its imaginative power,” according to which “past and future exist only in the mind” (Le Poidevin), Johann Gottfried Herder’s conviction of the existence “at any one time in the Universe [of] infinitely many times.” and Edmund Husserl’s statement that “in expectation–phantasy forms the idea of the future from the past.” The explorations expand our views on the conceptual couple of experience and expectation and the future as research tools in ethnomusicology.

Performing Arts and Gender in Postcolonial Western Uganda

The book focuses on runyege, the main genre of the Banyoro and Batooro people of Western Uganda, exploring its different components of singing, instrument playing, dancing, and acting and identifying their complex relationships to gender models and expressions.

Drawing on archival research and extensive fieldwork in the regions of Bunyoro and Tooro, the author examines traditional arts as both the manifestation and the building blocks of local culture, vibrantly discussing the imbrication of Ugandan performing arts with gender and postcolonialism.

Studia Instrumentorum Musicae Popularis (New Series) 8

This collection comprises papers presented at the 24th Symposium of the ICTM Study Group on Musical Instruments, held in the Spring of 2023 at the Faculty of Music, University of the Visual and Performing Arts, Colombo, Sri Lanka.

All scholars make valuable contributions in questions about sound manipulation or about musical instruments of humans as part of nature. Did you know that Jimi Hendrix manipulated his sound effects or how many waza trumpets of the Berta are quickly tuned and which instruments accompany a joi̇k in reality? These and many other questions are answered in the diverse articles compiled in this volume.
World Network

The ICTMD World Network is composed of individuals, called Liaison Officers, and representatives of organisations, called National and Regional Committees. They all act as links between the Council and the community of individuals and organisations involved with traditional music and dance in their country or region.
